HOW THE JAPANESE FIGHT FIRE.- Une writing about the transit of Venus from Nagas aki, tells, in passing, how oddly they mis manage a fire in that county, as follows: We arrived at the fire evidently some time after it had begun, and found the streets full of people, with lanterns. Here all persons are required to carry lanterns at night, having painted on the outside, at the bottom, the bearer's business. For instance, this is indicated for the pavy by one zig-zag line, for the army two; in the middle the crest, and at the top the rank indicated by the number of horizontal stripes. The narrow streets were full of women looking at the fire, but not moving. We happened to be near one of their peculiar fire engines. They are made throughout of wood, the main part being an oblong, beavy box. Running parallel with the length of this, is a beam worked up and down, carrying on each side of its central support the plunger of a pump.

Those pumps are connected with a bamboo nezzle about five feet long, which is fastened by a rude universal joint, so that it may be turned in any direction. This machine is brought on wheels, and put down in a convenient place; buckets of water are brought and poured into this box, and five or six men work the beam while another stands on the box and directs the nozzle. The houses are all low, about one and a half story, and made of wood, except the heavy, tiled roof. When we first saw the fire, they had one of these squirts, but no water, so we joined the crowd in yelling "mitzee." Finally some was brought in large buckets and poured into the box of the apparatus, and they began to pump; but, being too far from the fire, did not do much with their water. So three of us persuaded them by very energetic gestures to move nearer. This they did; but as soon as it became a little warm, they withdrew and again played from a distance. We next tried to get them to use axes and cut through the posts of the houses.

This they did to some extent, but did not begin sufficiently far from the fire, and were too late. About this time some Russian sailors appeared with ropes and buckets. The ropes we tied to beams, and a number of men pulling on these drew down some of the houses which had been partly cut away. For a few minutes we stopped active work, and I tried to make some of the Japanese who were there in uniform understand the advantages of cutting down the houses in front of the fire. I took one of them, who I found after the fire was the Chief Engineer, by the arm, and walked him up a ladder to the top of the house, and him up a ladder to the top of the house, and so the control of the house, and the control of the house and the control of the house, and the control of the house in front of the fire. I took month. My residence is commodious, high and control of the sale of the commodious, high and healthy, backers the Shenandoah river, and walked him up a ladder to the top of the house, and the control of the control of the sale of the control of the control of the sale of the control of the sale of the control of the sale of the control of the tried to point out to him the advisability of soft; also filtered cisterns and sulphur spring on

The nozzle of this was passed up, and I played fireman by directing it. Before long we had checked the fire in one direction, and retired to another part, where we found the Russian sailors hed the fire nearly under control. Went home at 3 a. m. tired and wet through. In case of a fire the man who lives in the house where the fire originates must pay for that house. If too poor to do so, he has to go to prison and work until it is paid for.

MOODY'S MANNER. - The sermon that follows is simply the story of the closing scenes in the Saviour's life, beginning with the gathering of the little company of thirteen at the Last Supper. It is told in the photographic way of one who has studied it so intently that the whole scene stands out in clear detail and intensely real before him. And he makes it seem very real and present to his audience. There are Moodyish touches to the picture, here and there, that are very characteristic and effective. 'Judas made great professions. He got near enough to the Son of God to kiss him. But he went to dampation." His voice seems to have been overstrained, and is not as pleasant as it used to be. His words tumble over each other often in the haste of his utteracce. He has a surprising faculty for such grammatical mistakes and illiteracies as, "Them Jews," "The Spirit done it," "Taint no use," "Git right up," "He come to him," etc. But these minor blemishes sink out of notice in the tremendous earnestness with which he speaks. That is the pre-eminent characteristic of the discourse. The noiseless, rapt attention of the vast congregation is wonderful. Hundreds are

In the very midst of the discourse and the height of its interest two or three quickly succeeding shricks came from the centre of the audience. Mr. Moody stopped as if it were a signal shot from Satau's line, and, with Sheri-dan-like promptness said, "We'll stand up and sing 'Rock of ages, cleft for me,' and the ushers will please help that friend out of the hall. She's hysterical." There were no more "bysterical" demonstrations during the evening, and the congregation scarcely realized that there had been any interruption during the service. - London Cor. Christian Union.

A MOTHER'S HOME.—The most perfect home I ever saw was in a little house, into the sweet inceuse of whose fires went not costly things. Six hundred dollars served for a year's diving of a father, a mother and three children. But the mother was a creator of home, and her relations with her children were the most beautiful I have ever seen. Even a dull and commonplace man was lifted up and enabled to do work for souls by the atmosphere which this woman created. Every inmate of her house involuntarily looked into her face for the keynote of the day, and it always rang clear, From the rosebud or the clover leaf, which, in spite of her housework, she always found time to put by our plates at breakfast, down to the essay or story she had on hand to be read or discussed in the evening, there was no inter mission of her influence. She always has been, and always will be, my ideal of a mother, a wife. If to her quick brain, loving heart and exqui-site tact had been added the appliance of wealth and the enlargement of wider culture, hers would have been absolutely the ideal home. As it was, it is the best I have ever seen. It has been more than twenty years since I crossed its threshold. I do not know whether she is living or not. But as I see house after house in which fathers, mothers, and children are dragging out their lives in a haphazard alternation always think with a sigh of that little cottage by the sea shore, and the woman who was the "light thereof," and I find in the face of many women and children, as plainly written and as sad to see as in the newspaper columns of "Per sad to see as in the newspaper columns of "Per sad to see as in the newspaper columns of "Per sand I find in the face of many 29
